Handbook of Intercultural Training - Brian McAllister Lin - 1997

McAllister Lin offers the first detailed history of the U.S. Army in Hawaii and the Philippines between 1902 and 1940. Most accounts focus on the months preceding the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. By examining the years prior to the outbreak of war, Linn provides a comprehensive picture of the U.S. military presence in the region, concentrating on strategy, tactics, internal security, relations with local communities, and military technology. Linn challenges earlier studies which argue that army officers either ignored or denigrated the Japanese threat and remained unprepared for war. He demonstrates instead that from 1907 onward the U.S. military was aware of the threat; that they developed a series of plans to meet it; and that they in fact identified even if they could not solve many of the problems that would become tragicly apparent on December 7, 1941.

The three centuries since the first landing of Spanish explorers in the Philippines have coincided with blank pages in the history of modern Asian societies. The Philippines were added to Spain's empire in 1565, wrestled from Spain by the United States in 1898, and became an autonomous republic within the Commonwealth of the Philippines in 1935, which lapsed into independence in 1946. Throughout this entire period, the Philippines have felt the impact of the Westernized forces of colonialism. The formation of the modern Philippines is a result of the interaction of these forces and of the indigenous development of modernized Filipino society.
